Ryuko Kubota
Professor
Language and Literacy Education
UBC Vancouver

As a Professor in the Department of Language and Literacy Education in the Faculty of Education and a woman of Asian background, I teach courses on social, cultural, and ideological issues of teaching languages and implications for children and adults from diverse backgrounds. Specifically, my research and professional activities focus on critically examining various forms of racism and other oppressive practices in local institutions and broader international contexts. If elected as a member-at-large of the Faculty Association, I will contribute to the Association’s work to promote antiracism and all forms of anti-oppression initiatives. I also aim to promote academic freedom for all campus members.
